Lexington, Ky., Dec. 3.—The case of Nat. A. High and his wife the famous confederate spy, Belle Boyd, charged with trying to beat a board bill, was dismissed in Judge Falconer's court yesterday without a hearing. MOTHER MCKINLEY DYING.

The President Is by Her Bedside Today.

Canton, O., Dec. 3.—Mrs. Nancy McKinley, the President's mother, is lying at the point of death. The end of her life seems but the matter of a few hours.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—President McKinley left here at 7:20 o'clock last night for the Pennsylvania railroad for the bedside of his sick mother at Canton, where he arrived this morning. With him went Judge Day, assistant secretary of state, the two occupying the Pullman car "Davy Crockett," which was attached to the regular train.

The president, who had made hurried arrangements for his departure, during the afternoon disposed of a large volume of business which was awaiting his attention. He reached the station, unattended, a few minutes before the train left. Desiring to avoid any demonstration, the president instructed the conductor to drive to the baggage entrance, where Assistant Secretary Day, Secretary Potter and the executive clerk awaited him. The president's stay at Canton will depend upon the condition in which he finds his mother. If she improves he will return to Washington in time for the opening of congress and later go again to Canton.

Washington, Dec. 3.—The Postoffice Department is taking a firm stand against the so-called "missing letter" and "missing word" contests which are being conducted by a number of publishers. All newspapers and periodicals containing advertisements of this character are forbidden transmission in the mails.

POPE SAYS NO.

Cardist Intervention Will Not Take Place While He Lives.

New York, Dec. 3.—A cable from Rome says the pope has demanded that Don Carlos postpone issuing a manifesto to his Spanish adherents. The pope constitutes the strongest bulwark of defense to the queen regent of Spain. It is unlikely that any earlier intervention will take place so long as he lives.

Former Robber Robbed.

Russellville, Ky., Dec. 3.—Frank Poor and family were chloroformed by burglars and robbed last night. All things of any value in the house were taken. Bloodhounds are now on trail. Mr. Poor is a prominent farmer, and resides three miles from this city. No clew.

Owensboro's Robber Gang.

Owensboro, Ky., Dec. 3.—It seems certain that Owensboro and Daviess counties are infested by the drowsiest thieves in the business. Every morning new robberies are reported. The police and officers are working hard to run the rascals down.

Incontestable Policies.

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 3.—A bill providing for the incontestability of insurance policies after their first year has passed the house of representatives by a vote of 92 to 43. The measure was vigorously opposed, its penalties denouncing it as placing a premium on crime, but it passed and will probably go through the senate. The bill also provides that in case of suit the defendant must deposit with the court all premiums, with interest paid in by the plaintiff, and if the company wins the plaintiff receives the money, less the court costs. If the plaintiff wins, the defendant makes the premiums, less the court costs.

THAT LEGAL COMPROMISE.

The Details of the Agreement Made Between Oliver Allard and Mrs. Spaulding.

If Effected, It Will Settle All Litigation Between Them, and Constitute an Amicable Adjustment.

The terms of the Allard-Spaulding compromise have been made public. The statement that the compromise has been consummated, published in a contemporary, was premature. It has been agreed upon, but not effected.

In a nut-shell, the case is this: Mrs. Spaulding brought suit, in behalf of her children, to break the will of the late J. L. Allard. She did this, and the next thing in order would be to bring suit for one-half the property. Before this suit was instituted, Allard proposed a compromise. He agreed to deed to Mrs. Spaulding and her children, one-half his property on this side of the river.

In addition, he agreed to pay Mrs. Spaulding about $300, or give her the diamond pin he once had her arrested for stealing, and to in open court state that he gave it to her and that she did not steal it. Further, he was to give Mrs. Spaulding's two children $1,000 jointly, for services they have rendered him in the past, and other considerations. In return, litigation between Mrs. Spaulding and C. O. Allard will cease. She is to drop the prosecution in the will case, and also in the $20,000 damage suit brought by her against Allard for his swearing out a warrant against her for stealing it.

The attorneys are still working on the compromise. It will in no way affect the Illinois land owned by Allard, the ownership of which may be settled later.

The Allard estate has been greatly overestimated. Those in a position to know say that his property on this side of the river is worth, all told, about $60,000, while his 1,500 acres or more of land on the Illinois side is worth but $12,000. Allard once agreed to take $10,000 for it, but the man who desired to purchase it had in the meantime bought other land.

The compromise, it is said, will be consummated by the first part of next week.

Mr. Allard had been selected as chairman of the sewerage committee, but declines to serve. His reason is not clear, as he was considered the best man in the council for the place, and was enthusiastically for sewerage when a member of the council two years ago.

Mayor Lang stated this morning that the above chairman were all that were definite thus far, as some difficulty is being encountered on account of the members having some some preference for particular committees.

Mayor Lang, in order to preserve harmony, desires to place the councilmen on those committee that they desire to be on, and for this reason has decided on nothing definite further than above.

FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS

Suit Filed in the Circuit Court This Afternoon Against the Sun Publishing Co. by the Register Publishing Co.

The Register Newspaper Company this afternoon filed a suit in the circuit court against the Sun Publishing Company for alleged libel, asking for $5,000.

The suit, as is probably already known to a majority of the citizens of Paducah, in as much as the Sun has mentioned it before grew out of a publication in the editorial columns of the Sun.

The plaintiffs in the suit claim that the Sun alleged the former had been paid to oppose the sewerage system, and for the alleged injury to reputation and character ask for $5,000.

A SPONSOR.

To Christen the Kentucky Will Be Named by Governor Bradley Soon.

Washington, Dec. 3.—Secretary Long of the Navy, has written to Gov. Bradley, asking him to recommend some Kentucky girl as sponsor to christen the battleship Kentucky. The Secretary says he has not heard from Gov. Bradley as yet, but according to the custom of the department he will nominate the Governor's choice for sponsor. He will also ask the Governor to recommend other Kentucky girls as assistant sponsors.

Regarding the claim of Miss Richardson, of Lexington, that she had been appointed by Secretary Herbert to be battleship's sponsor, he said that no Secretary could possibly bind an incoming officer to a choice to be made under another administration.

Secretary Herbert corroborated this statement when seen today, saying that it would have been entirely out of place for him to have appointed a sponsor who was not to act during his administration.

He remembers Miss Richardson very well, having sat next to her at a dinner party. In which he expressed the hope that the Kentucky might be christened during his administration, in which case he said he would have been proud to have had Miss Richardson act as sponsor.

The Kentucky will be launched from Newport News some time in January, and a large party of Washington society contingent will participate in the event.

The gentlemen who have been on a hunt in Michigan are all back, and relate some amusing experiences. The last to return was Mr. George Robertson, who got back yesterday. Dr. Boyd and Capt. H. H. have been back several days. The first joke told, possibly, is on Mr. Robertson, who is one of the most thorough and experienced hunters in the state.

Soon after the party arrived on the camp grounds, Mr. Robertson began to long for a snow. "Oh, for a snow," he exclaimed, "it would be a treat."

One afternoon it began snowing. It snowed and snowed, and at last Mr. Robertson came in simply overjoyed with the snow. "What a fine day," he exclaimed, "it is just what we need."

He poked his Winchester into the fire to get warm. Fearing that it would get too warm, he emptied the magazine of all its loads, and after heating it wiped it off dry.

"You'd better put those cartridges back," suggested Dr. Boyd.

"Oh, I'll put 'em in tomorrow," assured Mr. Robertson, as he put up the gun and hurried in to wait for the dawn. He was out before daylight, and gone before the others were up. His experience is told from his own narrative. He soon struck a trail of seven deer. He followed them for three hours without getting in sight of them. Finally he sighted them at the distance, and began crawling through the snow to reach them unobserved. Then he crept for about a mile, using his face for a snowplow. But he didn't mind the cold or the snow. Deer hunters have to get used to both. He then lay behind a log and waited for the deer to feed up to him. When the deer got within fifteen yards, he cautiously took aim and pulled the trigger. Bang! There was nothing save a click.

The deer raised her head, sniffed the air, and laid to maintaining again. Mr. Robertson pulled down the lever as noiselessly as possible, took aim a second time, and again pulled the trigger. Click! There was not a sound, except the snuffing of the deer as they turned and bounded off. Mr. Robertson looked for somebody to kick him, but finding in his quest failed to camp, as he saw a cartridge in his gun. He had plenty in his belt, but those deer were gone forever. At midnight he dragged his weary limbs into camp, and they all had the laugh on him.

A good joke is also told on Mr. Boyd. Dr. Boyd is a pretty good marksman, but upon his arrival in the region of deer and snow he changed the sights on his gun. The morning he got out and after tramping several hours came upon a majestic looking buck. He rested his Winchester on a log and fired, but the deer only raised his head. The doctor was surprised, but as rapidly as possible shot again, with no better luck than before. He then aimed low, thinking his gun was overloading and fired a third time. Then the buck fell, but just as the doctor started towards him, his friend, Capt. Carpenter, rushed up and claimed the trophy. "I wanted nothing as I could for you to kill that deer," Dr. Boyd said with a smile, "but I don't know whether I'd have to kill him for you, after you'd shot at him twice."

"Why, I shot three times," replied the doctor.

"Well, I didn't hear but two," rejoined Capt. Carter.

"I guess we both shot at the same instant then," concluded the doctor, "and I'll not claim the most, as I had two fair shots and missed." And it developed upon investigation that Capt. Carpenter was really the lucky marksman, and that Dr. Boyd had missed a deer three times in succession at a distance of fifteen paces. When he went to camp and tested his gun, he found that it was out of three feet.

Another joke is told on "Albert," the colored cook. Albert acquired the habit of stealing away with one of the guns after his (artificial) task of cooking for half a dozen hungry hunters was finished, looking for stray deer the night hunters may have missed.

One day the hunters were tramping along in various parts of the woods a mile or more apart, when they were startled by a loud bang. This was followed by a quick bang, bang, bang, and then another report in a few minutes. The hunters began howling their wails and answering each other, each thinking that the other had ambushed a whole herd of deer.

Dr. Boyd arrived on the scene first. He found Albert walking in a ring around a huge tree, with a 28 Winchester in his hand. On the top-most bough was a tiny red squirrel, still barking at the darkness of the night.

"Doc, that," exclaimed Albert, "I jes couldn't hold shootin' at dat little red devil. He sat dat an' bak an' bak at me 'til I jes' hab to shoot at 'im."

The hunters were very indignant, and Albert had to prepare many extra rounds to regale the favor of the hunters.

The last joke is on Mr. Robertson. Dr. Boyd one day told him to remain near the camp and he would go out and drive a deer near him. The doctor at length found the deer of the largest deer he ever saw in a forest. He directed it straight towards the camp, and it passed within a short distance of Mr. Robertson, who failed to shoot at it.

When Dr. Boyd arrived on the scene in a breathless state and asked why he had not shot at the deer, Mr. Robertson replied:

"Why, Doc, there didn't any deer come this way. I saw a jackass ten or fifteen minutes ago, but I didn't want to shoot at that."

Two well known young lawyers who defended a couple of prisoners in the police court not many days ago, are said to have received the following as a fee: A shanty boat, one dog, one gun, all the provisions aboard, and all the furniture. It is said that if their clients are sent over the road, they are to move into the boat and keep bachelor's quarters.

Deputy U. S. Marshal Latine says the government is very strict in respect to obstructing the mails. One instance of this is the arrest of a young man from Unkleville for interfering with the mails, because it leaked out that last July his buggy collided with the mail hack. The evidence showed that it was merely an accident, and this is what secured for the man his liberty.

The federal authorities could make a dozen arrests a day on this same charge. "Youth the big deputy arrested," they wanted to.

"They could arrest dozens of express drivers and others in the streets and at the union depot, when baggage wagon drivers, express company drivers and others crowd the mail wagon out from the platform, could get warrants against them all. It's dangerous business dealing with a mail wagon."

A well-known young attorney of the south side has learned that danger lurks in the fatal words, "Give us some pie." The joke was one of the best ever perpetrated here.

Day before yesterday the young barister went into Frank Gogert's Blue Grass Exchange, to partake of lunch. He always eats lunch down town to save himself the trouble of going to his island Creek home for dinner. On this occasion he handed Gogert a neatly done up package, exclaiming that it was from a young lady who had seen and fallen in love with him. She desired to make his acquaintance, but advised him not to display his pleasure at her father's premises, for her father was not any too fond of such propositions.

Gogert began untying the package, and removed layer after layer of paper, sandwiched occasionally by a box of some sort. Finally he disclosed a cigarette, "but," he realized that he had been victimized. He acknowledged that the drinks were on him, and began cogitating with a view of getting even.

Yesterday morning he visited a local baker, and had a pie made to order. The pie was all right, so far as appearance is concerned, but it contained an indigestible substance commonly known as sawdust. The pie was reserved, and about noon the guileless young attorney dropped in after his usual collation, accompanied by four friends. When he finished up everything in sight, he made his customary call for pie, and a suburban-looking wedge was handed to him. He was unconscious of the many saws placed in it, and he took a large bite. The good-looking young attorney, who had been looking at the ceiling, suddenly checked for a minute or two, then he looked around at his friends, and after he had rejected that portion he had already imbibed, exclaimed with much feeling, and without even the semblance of a smile: "Sawdust, by G—!"

Some of the present police force are already looking for new jobs, as they see the handwriting on the wall.

Watson Lackey, in "The Royal Secret," will be at Cairo, Ill., on December 14, and will play engagements in several other neighboring cities, but he will not come to Paducah.

Some time since a society was formed here known as the "Children's Home Society," or something similar. Officers were elected, and for while the society was quite active, and succeeded in wresting from unworthy parents two or three children who were provided with good homes. The object of the society was to find homes for orphan children, or children whose associations or environments were not the best. Nothing has been heard from it lately, and a great many people would like to know whether it has gone out of business or not. There are a great many children here who ought to have better homes.

A policeman said to the writer today: "I, myself, know of two or three children who are being daily demoralized by vicious associations. I think if the Home of the Friendless is converted into an orphan's home, it will be one of the best things ever accomplished. I know of a little girl, a pretty little trick, who is being raised by an indifferent mother and vice and depravity, and allowed to spend her days among colored children of the worst class. She is being given no education whatever, and I wish some one would take steps to assume the guardianship of her."

Excellent exercises were held this afternoon in Principal Benton's room at the Lincoln school.

Miss Ada Jordan, of Chicago is in the city.

Mrs. Emma Buford, who has been in St. Louis for some time, has returned to the city.

The Congress of the United States meets next Tuesday.

The last census shows that there are in this state 26,851 more males than females. This is the cheering news to the old maids who had perhaps thought they had no chance to get married. From this it appears there must be more bachelors than maids.

We were told the other day by one of our young ladies, who is in a position to know, that there is almost a half dozen young ladies in this city who have renounced the idea of marrying at all. This will be sad news to those of our young men here and elsewhere, who have been worshipping at their shrine for so many moons. We were also given a picture that this stand taken by them is not the outcome of a fox-and-the-grapes state of affairs, but purely voluntary. There would be nothing to prevent us from accepting this as the whole truth and nothing but the truth, if it were not true that some of these same young ladies read the writing of such addresses as Beatrice Harrigan, Emily Zola, Sarah Grand and others. Mr. Clay. Now these dear girls may be past grandmasters in reading such stuff as novels are made of, but they are to be congratulated, if for nothing more than their giving the young men to understand that they are not over-anxious to marry; for there is not the least doubt on the part of any sensible person but that when the proper young men present themselves in the proper way, on that subject, they will meet with a reception that would be calculated to make Cupid crack his sides laughing.

The finest set of resolutions on any death, were those passed by the National Woman's Council, on that of Frederick Douglass. This council was in session at the time of his death at Washington, D. C.

Some people who are too honest to steal will borrow or buy on credit and never pay back.

Have nothing to do with a colored man who is too good to patronize his own race; too good to attend public gatherings when they can, meetings for their elevation and welfare. They are stumbling blocks across the pathway of our progress.

We are told that in the days of old that two men went up to the temple to worship—one proud, self-conscious, uplifted, clanked heaven that he was not like other men, while the other bowed down in meekness of spirit, content merely to be there and see the glory of the Almighty as some poor wayfarer of the night beholds the light streaming through the open casement of the proud and great. There always have been and always will be these two classes of men, and some how or other the heart goes out to the latter.

Cliff is dead, and all that remains mortal of her lies under the soil. She was only a dog, yet in her life time she was the pride of the household. But she is gone but not forgotten.

Today and yesterday the skies were bleak all day and the cold rain fell making it anything but pleasant for pedestrians, and everything conduced to the belief that winter is here. Not a chatter of the little chipmunks could be heard, not a flower to be seen save those little prisoners behind the glass of the shop windows. The roses, so glad, so bright, so beautiful, have passed, like the slow, serene falling of a long day checked with light and shadow.

Some one has said that life is long enough for friendship, but too brief for love, that rare flower that blossoms in all climates, but like the blue rose of paradise, its possession is granted only to a few. During life it is reserved for mortals to abuse us, for flatterers to deceive us, for fawns to peck at the heart on our sleeves, for pity to console us with a handclasp and the silent sympathy of a tear, and when death beckons us away into the silence, and friendship sits weeping its heart out over our passing, it is the sacred privilege of love to cast the last flower upon our graves and bid us Godspeed to a happier country.

The Mount Zion lodge of F. A. M. No. 6 held its annual election of officers last Wednesday evening. They were as follows: Messrs. Ben Campbell, W. M.; W. C. Edwards, Sr. W.; Sam Clark, J. W.; Geo. Kirk, treasurer, and W. H. Clark, sec'y.

Mr. Richard Richardson and Miss Eliza Wynn were quietly united in marriage at the residence of the former, 312 West Washington street, in the presence of a small crowd of select friends last evening at 8 o'clock. Mr. Richardson has been living here for quite a while and is at present engaged at work on the new school house. Miss Grundy originally came from Tennessee, but has been making this city her home for a number of years.

Mr. Robert W. Williams and Miss Maxie Wright were quietly married last evening at the residence of Mr. Charles Jones, Rev. W. E. Glover officiating. While this volcanic eruption in social circles had been expected for some time, it could not but surprise his many friends and acquaintances when this morning they learned that Hymen had forged the golden chain last evening. Here's to you Mr. Williams, and your happy bride. May you both live long and prosper, is the wish of your many friends.

How Do You Use the Wheel Made Life More Dangerous?
The bicycle has increased both the health and the hazards, the perils and the pleasures of life; but in exactly the same proportion to the increase in the number of things that are done with it, to determine how far the bicycle has made life more dangerous.

Accident Insurance, a Boston paper, has collected from the newspapers the bicycle accidents in the United States in August. They numbered 1,450, and the journal which collected them reaches the conclusion that they are about 12 percent of the whole number. This is, of course, not much better than a more exact, though the paper from which we are quoting claims to have had this conclusion "after careful investigation." These accidents resulted in the loss of 48 deaths, 211 fractures, 224 cuts and lacerations, 129 contusions and bruises, 11 dislocations, 80 sprains and 267 injuries to the head.

From figures of 1904 reaction in single months the will strike most people as a pretty fair list of casualties. Besides the 46 persons reported last night killed in August there were 19 persons reported as likely to die. Assuming one-half of those terminating fatally, and there would be 70 deaths from bicycles in August. August is a favorable month for riding. For many years it has been the month of the bicycle accident. Accident Insurance concludes that the average number of deaths for the month is 15, of 780 a year. Nearly all the deaths from accidents probably go in the hands of bicyclists. No one can fairly say that the fatal bicycle accidents in this country are from 700 to 800, and nearer 800 than 700. It would surprise no one who knows how much the newspapers do not get to learn that the fatalities reached 1,000.

Taking even 800, this compares with 151 persons killed in 1904 (year ending June 30), 1,261 railroad employees in 1,100 persons run over by trains. These things are, however, relative. About 50,000 bicyclists are believed to be in use. If there are 50,000, and 800 deaths, that makes a death annually for 62,500 bicyclists. Among trainmen there was in 1904 one death for every 152 employed. This indicates that it is 41 times as dangerous to be a bicyclist as to ride a bicycle. No one can fairly say that a risk as small as this. No one looks on a bicyclist as foolhardy, and his risk of getting killed is forty-fold that of a bicyclist's. Out of the passengers carried one out of 2,577, 74 was killed. There are not separate figures as to bicyclists, but as trips of each bicyclist average in 2,000 a year, a very different matter—as a railroad rider.

All this is more approximation, but as far as the death risk goes one may safely say that the bicyclist rider has a very much less risk of a fatal accident than a trainman, and that his risk is not so great. He is, however, a great deal more likely to be injured, and taking the reported road accidents only, that for a single month it concludes that the entire number is about 400 per month, or 4,800 a year.

No great trust can be put in a calculation of this sort. If there are about 1,000 bicyclist deaths in a year then about one bicyclist owner in 20 is injured in each year. Among the trainmen one in 100 is injured, so that while the bicyclist's chance of being killed is 40 times less than a trainman's, his chance of being hurt is only one-fifth as great. Again, assuming that bicyclists are ridden on the average five times a week, about one bicyclist passenger or tripper, so to speak, is hurt out of every 115,000, while among passengers one out of 175,000 is injured, so that the chances of injury on the bicycle to the chances on a railroad train are about as three to two.

The sound conclusion, therefore, is that while bicycling is on the whole less safe than traveling on a railroad, it has far less hazards than work on railroads. Hazards and perils bicycling riding are unquestionably less. This is one of the very best things about it. Our civilization would be but a poor, weak and spiritless thing if 5,000,000 bicyclist owners were not glad to face some risk for an intoxicating sport—Philadelphia Press.

passing, it is the sacred privilege of love to cast the last flower upon our graves and bid us Godspeed to a happier country.

The Mount Zion lodge of F. A. M. No. 6 held its annual election of officers last Wednesday evening. They were as follows: Messrs. Ben Campbell, W. M.; W. C. Edwards, Sr. W.; Sam Clark, J. W.; Geo. Kirk, treasurer, and W. H. Clark, sec'y.

Mr. Richard Richardson and Miss Eliza Wynn were quietly united in marriage at the residence of the former, 312 West Washington street, in the presence of a small crowd of select friends last evening at 8 o'clock. Mr. Richardson has been living here for quite a while and is at present engaged at work on the new school house. Miss Grundy originally came from Tennessee, but has been making this city her home for a number of years.

Mr. Robert W. Williams and Miss Maxie Wright were quietly married last evening at the residence of Mr. Charles Jones, Rev. W. E. Glover officiating. While this volcanic eruption in social circles had been expected for some time, it could not but surprise his many friends and acquaintances when this morning they learned that Hymen had forged the golden chain last evening. Here's to you Mr. Williams, and your happy bride. May you both live long and prosper, is the wish of your many friends.

The Elks held an enthusiastic meeting last night with an unusually large attendance. The memorial service for Sunday will be the most impressive ever held here, and the indications are that they will be witnessed by a large crowd. A new and beautiful feature will be added to these services.

AFTER A PARDON.
John McFadden Reports, But It May Be Too Late.

John McFadden, who was sent to the penitentiary several months ago for highway robbery, seems to have been benefited by his sojourn at Ed. dyville. He now seeks a pardon, and is attempting to enlist some of his former friends here in his behalf.

It appears that penitentiary life in a few months has accomplished what years of warning could not do when he was outside his walls. His ruin was due to whisky, and he was drunk when he and a young man named Cramer held up a baker in an alley here and robbed him of money with which to obtain more whisky. As both pleaded guilty and were sentenced to three years, it is unlikely, in the face of McFadden's past, that he will succeed in getting a pardon.

CAPT. OWENS' COAL.
He Trics a Load of It on the Ferry-Boat.

Very Much Pleased With Its Quality—Is Working a Mine.

Capt. James Owens was very jubilant today. He had a load of coal taken from his mine, eight miles in Illinois, opposite the city, on the ferry boat, burning it in the furnace.

He found that it burned like any other coal, and made steam just as good as any other coal.

"We have now gotten about twenty feet into the ground," remarked Capt. Owens, "and have a rock strata to get out of the way. The coal is good and seems to be there in unlimited quantities."

The mine of Owens' Bros. is located on the O. & M. road and this was the first load of it ever burned on the ferry boat.

ARTISTIC IMPROVEMENTS.
Many Being Made at the Gilberts Bar.

Mr. Mitchell Bozeo, the affable proprietor of Hotel Gilbert bar, is making many pretty improvements at his palatial establishment.

The ceiling is to be decorated in gold leaf, and the erstwhile glaring impressionistic frescoes on the walls have been obscured by tasty paintings.

The place is fast becoming one of the most popular in Paducah, and Mr. Bozeo is a most pleasant gentleman.

A HERO'S SORROW.

Some Timely Remarks Upon the Troubles of Cassius Marcellus Clay.

The Cincinnati Times-Star disapproves of the license the newspapers take in dealing with the unfortunate marital affairs of Gen. Clay, and takes a sympathetic, and even pathetic, view of the situation at White Hall in the following timely editorial:

THE HERO'S SORROW.
There is another side to the separation of Gen. Cassius M. Clay and his young wife, other than the one that has been held up to ridicule. The Gen. Clay in love is not the Gen. Clay in war and in the service of his country. The soldier, statesman, orator, diplomat and duelist that historians know cannot be pictured as the dejected individual now occupying famous White Hall. The Gen. Clay who was United States Ambassador to Russia, dictatorial, is not the Gen. Clay suing for a child's love. They are two separate and distinct characters, as are Napoleon at Friedland and Napoleon dying on St. Helena.

The marriage of Dora Richardson and Gen. Clay is a union of children, one in the first of the second childhood. It was an attempt to unite December 31 and January 1. Gen. Clay at eighty-five was again a child and childlike, longing to love and be loved just as Dora Richardson at fourteen yearned to bestow her affections and receive some fondness in return. He is in his senility and weakness and she in her youth and inexperience. He found an affinity, she one who could sympathize with her. Still it was a union of opposites, opposites that became more pronounced day by day, as dotage increased and childhood gave place to womanhood. His contentment, her dissatisfaction increased. The things that gratified a child palled the woman. A yearning for her heart led her back to the humble home from which she had taken her, and with no regrets she surrendered comfort for sorrow, in compliance with the spirit of woman dominating over the child. All earthly comfort was given up as womanhood asserted itself. A woman will understand and sympathize her. Gen. Clay, in his loneliness, is deserving of sympathy, not ridicule. The coarse jests are a poor reward for the valuable service he has rendered his race and his country.

DR. BROOKS BETTER.
He Was Able to Sit Up This Morning.

His Physicians Now Look Toward a Speedy Recovery—Events Not Arrested.

Dr. J. G. Brooks was much better this morning, and was able to sit up when his physicians called to see him. It is now thought all danger is past so far as concussion is concerned, and the only danger is in possible inflammation setting in. The doctors are very much pleased, however, with the indication of a speedy recovery, and Dr. Brooks' many friends will hope to see him out again soon.

Yesterday afternoon Mr. Park Brooks, a brother of the doctor, went before Justice Winchester and swore out a warrant against T. J. Everts, for malicious assault. The warrant was given to a constable, but up to noon had not been served.

This afternoon the warrant against Everts had not been served, the constable not being able to find him.
